that Regiment which some of our readers may remember.

Early in the Confederate war he volunteered in the company which went to the front under command of Captain G. M. Mattison. In the organization of the company Mr. Hodges was elected First-Lieutenant and when Captain Mattison resigned, Lieutenant Hodges was promoted. Subsequently, owing to ill health Captain Hodges resigned, and left the army to recover his health. When the Reserves were organized he was elected Lieutenant-Colonel of the Regiment which he joined.

Colonel Hodges married late in life. Since the war he married Miss Parker of Columbia, Who, with seven children, survives him.

For several years before his death he held a commission as Trial Juctice, and the duties of that office he discharged most intelligently and acceptably.

He was the son of General G. W. Hodges, and is related to a very large number of persons about Cokesbury and Hodges.

The deceased was a man of fine impulses, and was distinguished for the nobleness of his heart. In all his intercourse with his fellow-man he was unselfish, and always generous to the extent of his means,

course to the extent of his means,

AN ALAEM of FIRE.—Last Thursday night the cry of fire drew a considerable number of persons to the depot, where smoke was onzing from the cracks in a freight car. No fire was visible and the night was as dark as possible. It was necessary to have a hump to kee where the fire was. The engine was pushed down the track, out of the way, when the car was put on the side track, opposite the water tank. A hole was cut in the top of the car, and the water turned on. One baic of coton was badly burned, and the car was somewhat damaged. The fire was observed by Mr. Hammond, the night watchman, and but for his watchfulness, serious damage would have been done. It was in one of a train of cars standing before the depot.

MESSES, John R. Tolbert, Boney Williams and Burt Griffin came back from Newberry last Saturday, where they in convention, put Thomas W. Parmele, once Superlitendent of the Penitentiary, in nomination on the negro ticket, against Hon. D. W. Alken, the Democratic nominee for Congrels.

THERE was a report circulated on Monday that at Ninety-Six there had been "plumping in the primary election. Mr. T. C. Mr. JAMES SHILLITO, of Abbeville, and Mr. Doc. Bowle, of Gilgal, are the contestants for the office of Coroner of Abbeville county. Dr. J. D. Neel withdrew the name of his friend. Mr. David Dowtin, from the race.

John Allen, Seq., of Anderson, and Mr. Lee, of Augusta, were in town yesterday, attending to some business in the Probate Judge's office in connection with the estate of Bannister Allen, deceased.

Last Monday Capitain J. N. Cochran corrected the report that he was not a candidate, Colonel Cothran announced that Capitain W. A. Black was still in the field, notwithstanding his misfortune.

Headed Farmer. The office of County Commissioners is one of far more importance than many are aware of, There is no limit to the debt which they, (the Commissioners,) have it in their power to entail upon the County. We are not yet quite through paying the debt left as a legacy by the Radical Commissioners, notwithstanding it has been four years since they went out of office and the fact that there has been an annual levy for that purpose eyer since.

I do not pretend to say or wish to convey the impression that any one of those who are candidates for the position would wiifully do anything wrong, but a board composed entirely of inexperienced men might do a great deal of harm without in the least intending it. I think, therefore, it would be well for the public to consider these facts, when they cast their votes on next Friday, and see that at least one of the old board is retained.

BEFORE WAGRAM

On the night of the 22d the northern bank of the Danube presented a fearful spectacle; the flames of burning villages and inclosures threw & ghastly light on piles of the dead and masses of the ruined material of war. and despair and fear had replaced confidence in the minds of the young French soldiery. At a council of war held on the Island of Lobau, Napoleon's lieutenants to a man recom-mended a retreat to the southern bank fortunately, he had a heavy blanket everof the Danube, even at the cost of coat, which kept him emparatively comabandoning the wounded, and more fortable. have just returned from an expedition into the Sierra Neveda, about forty miles from town, relate the following remarkable inci-dent:—On last Thursday afternoon, about three o'clock, two of the party were on the trail of a deer, which led them into a remote savine in the fastnesses of the mountains, into which they had not before ventured. The snow being about two feet deep and the walking very heavy they became discouraged, and losing all hope of overtaking the deer, which they had wounded, they abandoned the putsuit. On their return one of them discharged

his gun at a hare, and soon a faint hallog

was heard at some distance to the right, as if from some one in distress, Uncertain whether they were not mistaken and had not been deceived by the wind, they shouted aloud, when the cry was repeated. As night would soon come on, they held a conrultation, and were about proceeding to their camp, three or four miles away, concluding that the noise was made by want dering Indians, or came from a party of wood-choppers. They started on, but soon s prolonged and mournful howl was borns . down by the wind and again reached their. ears. They stared at each other a moment, and then, by a simultaneous impulse, turnad in the direction from which the sound proceeded. They went on for some distance, floundering through the snow down precipitous descent, which led them into gloomy canon. As they drew nearer the voice of a human being could be distinctly court calling for relief. They answered that aid was approaching. The man's vells of misery changed to cries of joy; and they could hear him at intervals shouting, "For God's sake, don't go away and heave me," "Come and get me out," "I am caught and starving." Still they could see nothing. But, guided by the man's cries, and cheering him with hopeful answers as they advanced they pushed forward and at last discerned what appeared to be a small cabin built of heavy logs, without windows or doors. The snow had drifted against one side of the hut nearly as high as the roof, and as they could see no entrance. they went around to the other side . As soon as the occupant saw them he uttored ex clams. tions of the greatest joy, and explained his situation in a few words by stating that he had built a bear trap and had caught himself in it five days before. The door was made of heavy logs, and was so arranged as to slip down into its place from above. They tried to lift it up, but failed. Finally, by means of a stick of timber which lay near by, they pried it up sufficiently for the prisoner to crawl beneath. He appeared more dead than slive. but by the judicious use of a flask of Brandy they were able to get him to their camp about dark, where their companions had a blazing fire awaiting their roturn. The half-famished man ate ravenously. He was supplied with plenty of hot coffee and smoked a pipe, after which his strength somewhat revived, and he gave the following account of how he got into the gitustion in which he was found:

He said his name was Thomas Way, and that he had been engaged in chopping wood in the mountains during the summer. Since the first snowfall, about a month ago, he had frequently noticed tracks of bears among the pine trees, and had often tried to get a shot at them, but without success. At last the idea struck him to build a pen such as he had often seen grizzly bears caught in in Lake County, California, where he used to live. He explained that the beat trap is made by building a small square with a strong roof. The door is of heavy-logs also and slides up and down in the grooves. When it is up there is an open entrance about five feet high and four feet wide. A sheep is killed and hung up inside of the pen attached to a rope, which is sonnected with a trigger, so that when the bear enters and seizus the matten they door falls and he is caged. Way went to work and completed his trap to his satisfaction, and intended to bait it the same night. Having a curiosity to see how it would work, he went in and pulled the rope slightly, when the door fell down. He attempted to raise it, but was horror-stricken, and his hair stood on end when he found he was unable to budge it an inch. He worked and struggled, but the heavy weight refused to move. The per worked only too successfully, and he was raught in his own trap. He yelled, shouted, called for help, but, knowing that he was miles from a human habitation and in a savage locality where few persons ever ventured, he sat down iv. blank despair, He spent that night in agony and got but the Rhine.
